Please accept my sincere apologies for "manhandling" your letter to a lady. I assure you that such was neither the purpose nor the spirit of my letter. I maintain the thesis that the Bible does indicate the two classes of wine and that this has been understood by Christian peoples since the earliest of Sacred history. Anyone who has done any reading along this line knows the truth of this statement; it is undebatable, notwithstanding dissenting opinions. Says Seikie, (Life of Christ-p. 322) "The good and evil of wine were thus familiar." There are texts in which the

The Greek oinos is generally used in the New Testament to designate wine as you may see. However, it is quite easy to see that the Bible speaks of two kinds of wine. Is there any question as to the kind of wine referred to in such a statement as to "Be not drunk with wine (Greek any trouble in finding Bible commentaries, pious or profane, who believe that such scriptures refer to intoxicating wine? While it is true that the Hebrew yayin used quite generally in the Old Testament as oinos is in the New, yet the context is clear enough in many places, so that even a child could see that there is a difference. It is useless to refer to the dramatic for only a small portion of the Bible, a few chapters in the Old Testament, is written in this language.

However, the whole argument, that the wine, wine, etc., resolves itself into the intoxicating feature to which you evidently objected in my defense of the Scriptures (not prohibition). I doubt that it is necessary to quote again the verses showing the unmistakable tone of the Bible against drunkards and drunkenness. Allow me to quote again just one of the many verses referring to drunkenness: "Drivings, murder, drunkenness, (Greek revellings; see also Luke 21:34 and Romans 13:13) revellings, and such like, of which I tell you, that they shall not inherit the kingdom of God." Dear Simple:

Please accept my sincere apologies for "offending" your letter to a lady. I assure you that such was neither the purpose nor the spirit of my letter. However, you took it upon yourself to compare and contrast the teachings of the Bible with the teachings of the "simple" book which was, to put it mildly, unimpressive and contrary to the beliefs of the majority of Christian people. As I pointed out in the opening paragraph, the Scriptures do not sustain the use of intoxicants. The context of my article plainly referred to intoxicants as beverages containing dangerous poisons. I am sure that it was in defense of the Scriptures, rather than to challenge your views on prohibition, which are of little value to me and certainly not referred to in my letter.

Now, would you are a scholar, being privy to know both forms of Greek and Latin, use vivid imagination in your letters. But isn't it possible that you still learn, though skilled in erudition? I am sure you did drink wine; so did the disciples. That was admitted in my previous letter. You state that this was intoxicating wine. Where is the proof of your statement? A mere statement is no proof. The millions of Christ's followers in the Christian world of today certainly cannot be cited as proof of a doctrine of Jesus. The law of nature does not state that fermentation is a process which takes place not only in juices, but also in grains, plants of food, and rendering them unfit for table use. But isn't it a fact that to class wine as intoxicating is simply because there may be traces of alcohol in it? There is no spiritual distinction against the use of unadulterated wine, though in a strict scientific sense, it may be "fermented" to a certain extent. (Ref. Organic Chemistry, 1928).

It is a revolting blasphemy to classify Jesus as a drunkard, what language would be fitting to so describe such perversion of the gospel truth? I maintain the thesis that the Bible does indicate the two classes of wine and that this has been understood by Christians since the earliest of Sacred History. Anyone who has done any reading along this line knows the truth of this statement. It is unadulterated, not adulterated with opinions. Says Gieseler (Life of Christ—p. 323): "The good and evil of wine were thus fixed." There are texts in which the word wine is not designated directly, but it is easy to tell which is referred to in most instances, knowing there are two kinds, intoxicating and non-intoxicating. Border line cases trouble only the argumentative mind.

The Greek oinos is generally used in the New Testament to designate wine as you say. However, it is quite easy to see that the Bible speaks of two kinds of wine. Is there any question as to the kind of wine referred to in such a statement as "Be not drunk with wine (Greek oinos) wherein is excess, but be filled with the Spirit"? Eph. 5:18.

On the other hand, it is obvious that the fresh wine made by Christ at the marriage feast in Cana was not intoxicating. For it had just been made. "Jesus said unto them, 'Fill the waterpots with water.' And they filled them to the brim. And he said unto them, 'Draw out now, and bear to the governor of the feast.' And they bare it. When the ruler of the feast had tasted the water that was made wine, and knew not whence it was: (but the servants which drew the water knew) the governor of the feast called the bridegroom and said unto him, 'Every man at the beginning doth set forth good wine; and when men have well drunk, then that which is worse; but thou hast kept the good wine (Gr. oinos) until now.' John 2:7-10. In view of such Scriptures I believe any Bible student is justified in challenging as a gross misstatement that "As near as one can put the original in English the word oinos was used as a general type, as now we use the word 'wine' to signify the fermented product and nothing else." You certainly have no right to refer to others as narrow, self-righteous, etc., etc., when you take the liberty to claim that only "fermented wine" is referred to in the New Testament.

Allow me to quote from Gilbert, who is not only a Hebrew and a scholar, but was trained for the Rabbinical priesthood. Speaking of the communion wine as then used, he says: "The wine used is always sweet juice, and unfermented." Practical Lessons for the Church of Today—p. 300. Probably this author knows more regarding this subject than the both of us will ever know; so why not be at least charitable instead of rambling on regarding squirrel cages at others before someone presents the other side of the case.

The Old Testament is not silent on the wine problem. May we listen to reason at your suggestion and read together? "Woe unto them that rise up early in the morning, that they may follow strong drink; that continues until night, till wine (Hebrew—yayin) influence them." Isaiah 56:11. Let us notice again: "Wine (Hebrew—yayin) is a mocker, strong drink is raging; and whosoever is deceived thereby is not wise." Prov. 20:1. Also Prov. 23:21-22. "Look not thou upon the wine (Hebrew—yayin) when it is red, when it giveth his color in the cup, when it moveth itself like an adder." How many times is it necessary to read such Scriptures before deciding that intoxicating drinks are condemned? Do you have any trouble in finding Bible commentators, pious or profane, who believe that such scriptures refer to intoxicating wine? While it is true that the Hebrew yayin is used quite generally in the Old Testament as oinos is in the New, yet the context is clear enough in many places, so that even a child could see that there is a difference. It is useless to refer to the Anabaptists for only a small portion of the Bible, a few chapters in the Old Testament, is written in this language.

However, the whole argument relative to wine, etc., resolves itself into the intoxicating feature to which you evidently objected in my defense of the Scriptures (not prohibition). I doubt that it is necessary to quote again the verses showing the unmistakable tone of the Bible against drunkenness and drunkenness. At low me to quote again just one of the many verses referring to drunkenness: "Savagings, murder, drunkenness, (Greek mether) see also Luke 21:34 and 35:22, 35:23, 35:24, 35:25, 35:26, 35:27, 35:28, 35:987, 35:988, 35:989, 35:990, 35:991, 35:992, 35:993, 35:994, 35:995, 35:996, 35:997, 35:998, 35:999, 35:1000.

Your "common honesty," which no one has questioned, should lead you to recount the number of Scriptural instances where "the fermented product is favorably mentioned a hundred times" as you state. This guess was over-estimated as much as your hopes were high that this might be true. A closer study of the Scriptures with an aim for accuracy might prove beneficial, for your whole argument is a perversion of truth, imagination and unscriptural.

Certainly no one fooled but yourself by your imaginative picture of the disciples carrying around wine presses for providing wine. The Jews were acquainted with boiled wine, and it was a custom to add water to their wine. Possibly this was to dilute and counteract the fermentative and alcoholic products, which were easily produced in warm countries. See Ebersheim, "Life and Times of Jesus the Messiah"—Vol. II, p. 208. Probably there were some Jews who preferred the undiluted drink.

Be it known unto you, O man of wisdom, that in practically all countries there have been people who have no trouble, past or present, in getting plenty of wine which was not intoxicating. It is admitted that it may contain small amounts of alcohol, but who is fanatical enough to refuse a cup of cider of two days old, because fermentation has set in? There is a limit to most things; even a beneficial spanking would be criminal if it excess led to the death of the child. You may believe this if you wish for your own integrity.

It seems that if you should charge no one with "self-deluding" arguments until you have first set the example of consistency. Do you consider it first class evidence that Jesus was a drinker of intoxicating beverages simply because millions of his "devoted" followers still drink it? Your knowledge of Church History alone should have such evidence without considering the desirability of fairness. Again, I submit to the candid mind that it is inconsistent that Jesus should practice one thing and teach another. It is preposterous to claim that Jesus would set the example of drinking intoxicating beverages and then condemn the drunkard! If the Scriptures are inconsistent, then they are reduced to the level of fallible man and the Book, which has been the hope of the world, is relegated to the realm of mere philosophy, and why quote it?

Pardon me if it seems "glibish" to remind you that your skillfully devised explanation of Jesus' refusing the wine and myrrh is not borne out by Bible commentators. However, you are undoubtedly acquainted with the plan of salvation as set forth in the Scriptures, so as to realize that man's redemption depended upon the sinless life of Christ. Just one sin by our Saviour and the world would have been lost. You are certainly well informed enough in human nature and social conditions to realize the ease with which sin and crime are committed while under the influence of alcohol. There are many Bible students, accordingly, who believe that Jesus endeavored to keep his mind clear to the end that he be not led into sin. (Gieseler's "Life of Christ"—p. 780).

"Fruit of the vine" is only poetic, why is it used only in these special references, i. e., the communion? There is little question relating to the orthodoxy of this expression in the Scriptures. (Ref. "The New Archaeological Discoveries" by Coburn & Naville—p. 180). Do you dare state that the communion wine used by Jesus was intoxicating? It seems that in your theological literature, you have failed to find commentators who believe in "a comforting delusion" as you call it. The follower of Jesus are legion who have decided that drunkenness is unchristian. Allow me to quote from one of the many commentators on this subject: "The wine which Christ provided for the feast, and that which he gave to the disciples as a symbol of His own blood, was the pure juice of the grape. To this the prophet Isaiah refers when he speaks of the new wine 'in the cluster,' and says, 'Destroy it not; for a blessing is in it.' Isa. 65:8.

It was Christ, who in the Old Testament (John 8:55, etc.) gave the warning to Israel, 'Wine is a mocker, strong drink is raging; and whosoever is deceived thereby is not wise.' And He Himself provided no such beverage. Satan tempts men to indulgence that will becloud reason and benumb the spiritual perceptions, but Christ teaches us to bring the lower nature into subjection. His whole life was an example of self-denial. In order to break the power of appetite, He suffered in our behalf the severest test that humanity could endure. It was Christ who directed that John the Baptist should drink neither wine nor strong drink. It was He who enjoined similar abstinence upon the wife of Manoah. And he pronounced a curse upon the man who should put the bottle to his neighbor's lips (Hab. 2:15). Christ did not contradict His own teaching. The unfettered wine which He provided for the wedding guests was a wholesome and refreshing drink. Its effect was to bring the taste into harmony with a healthful appetite."

The Scriptures quoted or referred to in this article are submitted in the spirit of friendliness for truth's sake. You must admit that these references are clear whether you care to believe them or not. But if you interpret scriptures as you did my reference of a "vision of the Good Book," I can easily see why you are deluded. It seems inconsistent with your verbose explanation to explain to you the word "vision" which from the context clearly meant "knowledge," meaning insight, etc. (Ref.—any good dictionary, psychology or English book, etc.). Thus this subject is closed as far as I am concerned, reminding you once again that Jesus was not a drunkard, the prophets decried drunkenness, and the Scriptures are all against it, whether in Greek, Hebrew, Latin or English—Douay, King James or Revised Version. Instead of "damning," my prayer is that God may be merciful to you and all of us.

Very truly yours,
—A Layman.

ALBANY

James E. Good

James E. Good of Albany, better known as Ed Good, who passed away at the home of John Adams of West Stoneham, where he had been staying for some months, was born in Green Oaks, Colchester, Nova Scotia, Nov. 28, 1853, the son of Matthew and Susan Good. At the age of sixteen he came to Albany and since that time had spent the greater part of his life there. He married Clara Kneeland, and a daughter, Ina, and a son, Roy, were born to them. The daughter, Ina, an aged sister, Mrs. Maria Good Kimball, and nieces and nephews survive him. He had been in failing health for some time. He was very fond of children and many a little tot was rocked to sleep in his arms. Ready always to lend a hand in sickness, sorrow and trouble, his acts of kindness will be much missed by all who knew him. Services were held at the Songo schoolhouse, May 2, conducted by S. S. Greenleaf of Bethel. Rev. R. C. Dalzell spoke words of comfort to the grieving relatives and friends. The many flowers bore silent tokens of esteem to another of us who has joined that vast throng of departed forms we see only in our mind's eye. Interment was in the family lot in the Songo cemetery, a short distance from the home where he had lived for years.

There will be a Circle supper at the church vestry, Hunt's Corner, Thursday night, May 9.

BODY OF LINDBERGH BABY FOUND

The fate of Charles Augustus Lindbergh, Jr., who was kidnapped from the home of his parents in Hopewell, N. J., March 1, was revealed Thursday afternoon by the discovery of the pitiful, mutilated corpse, with the skull crushed, at Mount Rose Hill, less than five miles from the Lindbergh home. It removed all barriers to bringing into play every power hitherto held in check for fear overt police action might bring harm to the baby. Authorities made it plain that a hunt, perhaps unprecedented in criminal history was already in progress; that no spot on earth would be safe for the killers; that every peace officer in the United States would be on the alert, that foreign police would lend their full co-operation; that, no matter where the bloodmoney extorted from the tortured parents is spent, it will be traced.

The body lay face down. The sleeping suit was missing. Two dirty and rain-soaked shirts lay on the shrivelled and decomposed form. The stomach band and diapers were gone. Remnants of the child's blonde, curly hair clung to the skull.

Discovery of the body revealed the cruelty practiced on Col. Lindbergh when the kidnappers, or persons pretending to be the kidnappers, extorted $50,000 from him for a child already dead.

Time to Think of Sport Shoes
This is National Sport Shoe Week

Memorial Day only eleven days ahead.

Fourth of July and Vacation Time on the way. You'll have new clothes for that holiday or vacation trip. But don't forget the footwear.

If you play golf, start the season right with a new pair of golf shoes.

You'll need footwear for beach or tennis. Or if you plan a motor trip, a neat pair of white or two-tone Oxfords, perforated for coolness, if you prefer, is just the thing.

Whatever you do for diversion in summer time, we have the right shoes.

See the complete line of up-to-the-minute styles in summer footwear, on display in our windows all this week.

"WHY DIDN'T I invest in Central Maine Power Company before?"

Ten years from now will you be saying the same thing that some people are today?

Suppose you HAD invested in 20 shares of CMP Preferred and deposited your dividend checks in your savings bank.

Here is what happens:

20 shares will become 40 shares in about 11 years—and pay you $240 a year.

20 shares will become 80 shares in another 11 years—and pay you $480 a year.

20 shares will become 160 shares in another 11 years—and pay you $960 a year—over $18 a week for the rest of your life!

REPUBLICAN VOTERS CAN CHOOSE From the Bridgton News

"Edward E. Chase, of Cape Elizabeth, who shortly after the state convention, came into the limelight as a candidate for the Republican nomination for Representative to Congress from this district, which now comprises the counties of Cumberland, York, Oxford and Sagadahoc, running on a dripping wet platform, Carroll L. Beedy, who has represented the First District for several years, were among the principal speakers at the Lincoln Club dinner, recently held in Portland. Mr. Beedy said, among other things:

"I believe in the retention of the 18th amendment in the Federal Constitution and that it is the duty of a Representative to Congress to vote in strict accordance with the solemnly registered will of the people in his own state on any outstanding issue."

Mr. Chase on the other hand says in part:

"If I am elected to Congress I shall attack national prohibition as unsound law. Regardless of the results of any party campaign, I shall not support any law which is not in accordance with the majority of the people. If the people do not like what I do, their remedy will be in the next election. I shall not surrender my convictions in order to remain in office."

Therein lies one of the many outstanding differences in the two candidates. Mr. Beedy says that he not only believes that it is the duty of every representative of the people to carry out the mandates of the people whom he is representing.

Mr. Chase, apparently, has no convictions. He is a representative to Congress or any other representative of the people, is a public servant, but a law unto himself and intimates that if the people do not like what he does when he gets to Congress, the remedy lies in the next election.

Whatever anyone may believe as to the benefits or the disadvantages of the prohibitory law, there can be no argument as to Mr. Beedy's stand. He is elected to represent the people and he is absolutely correct when he asserts that he will carry out the mandates of the voters who elect him.

The Republican party of the state of Maine has declared for the retention of the 18th amendment and for the strict enforcement of the law. The Democratic party has declared for a popular referendum on the question.

Those who believe as the Democrats of this state apparently do and who also believe that the prohibitory question is an issue of national importance and that the long service of Congressman Beedy, at Washington, stand for nothing, have their remedy in the Democratic party. Republicans who believe in representative government and in party rule, cannot conscientiously vote either in the primary or in the September election, for a candidate, who openly asserts that the party platform means nothing to him and that regardless of the results of any popular referendum, he will vote, not as their representative, but in accordance with the dictates of his own conscience.

Mr. Chase made a valiant fight for a wet plank in the Republican state convention—and lost, the convention declaring for the retention of the law. If he cannot abide by the mandates of the Republican party, as expressed by the delegates to the convention, he should either run as an independent or throw his lot in with the Democrats, who believe as he does, on this important issue.

Personally we admire the independence of Mr. Chase, but it may be "bad politics" to ignore the party platform. We will wait and see.
